1. This situation report is current as of 6:30 pm. It concludes Embassy Nairobi's Referendum situation reports.
  2. Results from approximately 200 of 210 constituencies have been counted and final results should be announced within the next hour. The "Yes" vote is about 5.5 million and the "No" vote is about 2.5 million. Final results should show "Yes" with about 69 percent.
  3. President Kibaki, Prime Minister Odinga, and Vice President Musyoka addressed a large crowd at the Kenya International Conference Center at about 6:00 pm. Avoiding triumphalism, they struck themes of unity, reconciliation, renewal, and building a new Kenya. After Odinga called for unity and paid tribute to Kibaki's leadership, Kibaki noted that Kenya was coming to the end of an historic 20-year journey. The adoption of a new constitution was a victory for those who had fought long and hard for a new constitutional dispensation that would usher in a new Kenyan nation. He congratulated Kenyans on a successful and peaceful resolution of the constitutional process that showed that Kenya's democratic institutions had come of age. Kibaki said he was particularly pleased with the transparent and efficient conduct of the Interim Independent Electoral Commission. He called on all elements of Kenyan society to implement the constitution. Referring to opposition to the constitution, Kibaki said their voices would be heard. Democracy was about accepting the verdict of the majority, he said, while acknowledging space for the minority.
  4. Earlier in the day, opposition leader William Ruto conceded defeat. He thanked the Kenyan people for their peaceful participation in the process and specifically thanked the more than two million people who had resisted blackmail and manipulation to vote "no." He argued that the majority of Kenyans had either voted against the constitution or did not vote. Therefore, the "yes" side would have to consult with the opposition on issues of concern to it.
  5. Embassy observer teams have returned from the field and reported that the situation throughout Kenya, including the Rift Valley, is calm. Tensions have eased in the Rift Valley following Ruto's concession, and Post expects the post-Referendum period to be peaceful.
