MS –

Jake just relayed your desire to cancel tomorrow's interview. But I want to make sure you are aware of a few things that he was not in a position to share:

- 1) The Israeli & Palestinian interviewers and their teams skipped returning home today with their principals at great cost and energy in order to stay the extra day to you. One skipped traveling onward with Abbas.
- 2) Both the Israeli & Palestinian media outlets involved immediately announced their joint interview and are hyping its unprecedented nature
- 3) Because of #2, U.S. media is fully aware that this interview is scheduled for tomorrow morning.

So three points:

- 1) There is an incredibly high expectation for this interview occurring and canceling, no matter the reason cited, will be taken to mean something negative
- 2) The point of this interview was to shape the narrative coming out of today, and canceling will only contribute to a negative narrative in that we will be canceling on the most important figure in Israeli media, and I do not see Channel 2 taking that well
- 3) As positive as the symbolism of this interview was meant to be, we run the risk of the negative symbolism by canceling.

Typically when you want to cancel something I roll with it. But I want to strenuously object to doing so in this case. I understand you told the participants they should refrain from public comment, but first, that doesn't mean you have to and second, you know they won't really refrain. And I am certain they will appreciate the effusive things you have to say about them during this interview. Not to mention that the reason for canceling is something we ourselves could have foreseen before going so far down the road, and should have - which I don't think is fair or reflects well on you.

Lastly, on a much more practical note: to get you out of this I am going to have to bribe Channel 2 with a significant and exclusive interview when we are in Jerusalem in two weeks, and I guarantee you that will be far more painful than tomorrow's relative short and peaceful format.

If you'd like to discuss I'm at my desk and available or can call you through Ops.
