Madame Secretary, as we understood on Wednesday, our conscious decision not to mention domestic Egyptian issues publicly was noticed at the Post editorial board. I had multiple exchanges with Jackson over the course of the day yesterday. Based on your colloquy with Aboul-Gheit and Jeff's follow-up, we are quoted in the piece which you see in the clips as having a direct and spirited exchange with the Egyptians and that there was no misunderstanding of the importance that we attach to these issues. So in the end Jackson grants some credit for the discussion, and we agree to disagree on the degree to which this discussion should be public.
