H,
Attached missive from Simon. Busy as you are, thought you might find interesting. Nobody has grasped this water security issue since you left Senate, so I am giving to Pete King's Chief of Staff today. Serious issue..... but on lighter note the gang will raise the orange juice to you Friday morning :-) M

Typically this is not an easy question to answer. However, I guess I have three very major concerns with respect to NYC specifically and with the security of drinking water in the United States in general. Taking NYC as the lens through which we focus for the moment:-

We can do something about this now, quickly, effectively and affordably. Or we can try and clean up the mess and throw millions of dollars at it later having potentially lost significant numbers of people. I would think that any politician or state official who is aware of these issue would be duty bound to do something about it. I certainly would not wish to see they trying to explain why they didn't after the fact.

I hope that your discussions are fruitful and that the subject gets the attention it deserves.
