Madam Secretary, I wonder about [redacted] and [redacted] for the position you mentioned. I would add them to the list that includes [redacted] especially. He used to be in PM, meaning he has good relations with the military. I don't know [redacted] personally, but everyone says she's very good. She's going to [redacted] (assuming confirmation), but surely one can find an appropriate candidate for [redacted] more easily than the post you're considering. Farther down the list, I'd add [redacted] (currently in [redacted]) and [redacted]. Further down from that, I'd put [redacted]. I'll keep thinking.
