Cheryl,

I just had a productive exchange with [redacted] (she has been away). But it validated something I suspected -- that she predicts will lose my current job as [redacted] if I take the job with State. This is because I have a very conservative board who will be frustrated if I take this much time away, and also they are generally pretty far to the right.

But surrendering my current job is not necessarily a problem, because I'm willing to give it up if I can find a replacement position for after January 2013, when the Secretary steps down. But it means some more work to verify that [redacted] will re-hire me in a new position, or that another university will. I had earlier asked if you thought [redacted] might be amenable, and you said that it was hard to know, but if there are any possibilities there, this might be a good time to ask. I also have good contacts at [redacted] and will write the president, [redacted]. In other words, I will do all I can to make this happen. I want to work for you and the Secretary, and do a great job.

Cheryl,

I apologize to you for the delays -- I'm sure they are frustrating to you. I'm doing all I can this week to move it forward. And, as always, I'm happy to do any memos or writing of any kind if it helps you. Will write back soon.

best, [redacted]
