B6

(or night, depending where you are). [redacted] and I turned on the Convention tonight when John Kerry was speaking. [redacted] said: "who's that?" I said, "he ran for president in 2004; he's a senator; and he might be secretary of state if Obama wins." [redacted] said, with true amazement in his voice, "you mean a guy might be secretary of state?"

It's like Madeleine Albright's story about her grand-daughter not understanding why it was a big deal that she was a woman secretary of state, but it was completely spontaneous on [redacted] part! We've got a ways to go, but we've definitely made progress!
