B6

Oh, I wish I could have been there! I'm thrilled about Chelsea's participation for the first time and hope VV has a video so I can watch her and everyone else.

I also read the nice piece in the Post and another about Alyse in the Daily Beast. I'm so thrilled w what's been done these last years. And I wanted to go on and on about it and you in my video but got the hook so did the bare minimum in your intro.

And, that Tawakkol is a pistol. If she were American, she'd be either Speaker of the House or leader of Occupy Wall Street!

Woke up yesterday in Batumi, lunched in Baku and ended at another Syria meeting in Istanbul----so ready to get back.

As always, onward---but, where is the question!! H

Your presence was felt tonight in so many ways -- the foremost of which was Chelsea. It was fabulous to have her for the first time and she was terrific. She'd rewritten her script and was both personal, funny and inspirational. She mentioned that she too was at the first Vital Voices conference in Vienna (by the way, Swanee was there tonight and very happy). Chelsea also talked about your commitment to women's issues and while most people would describe that as a commitment to the next generation, she said, "if my mom were here she'd describe it as a commitment to the grandchildren she's hoping to have!"

Bill Burns was in the presidential box with his girls, which was very nice. The place was jammed with your friends from all over the country. It was like a campaign rally and almost turned in to one when Tawakkol, the Nobel laureate from Yemen, kept talking and then started chanting, "1,2, 3, 4, push Assad out the door." And the audience egged her on. We barely avoided a diplomatic incident! The only sad moment was [redacted] so her spot on the stage was a spotlight with no one under it.

Your introduction was over the top, but I'm very grateful that you made VV happen and it's just so gratifying to see where it is today.

Finally Kay Hutchison said she'd like to see you. [redacted]

We missed you hugely but Chelsea was a wonderful stand-in for her mom.
