

RELEASE IN PART
B5

From: Reines, Philippe I <reinesp@state.gov>
Sent: Thursday, February 16, 2012 8:02 AM
To: H
Subject: Re: NPR/Climate Change

And you'll see in today's NYT and WP that Todd's backgrounder absolutely paid off.

When he left for law school, Emily Cain replaced Ben Kobren as Todd's press person, and she's done a great job putting this week together. Good seeing how far she's come since being our press aide in the Senate office.

State's been a great period of growth for all of the younger staff you brought to the Department from the Senate and the campaign. For almost all of them, four years at one place is the longest job they've ever had. It's been a good learning environment for them. They're all far more equipped and ready for whatever comes their way next than they realize.

----- Original Message -----

From: H [mailto:HDR22@clintonemail.com]
Sent: Wednesday, February 15, 2012 11:14 PM
To: Reines, Philippe I
Subject: Re: NPR/Climate Change

Don't worry about it. Todd did that long backgrounder [REDACTED]

B5

Sent from my iPad

On Feb 15, 2012, at 9:25 PM, "Reines, Philippe I" <reinesp@state.gov> wrote:

> Turns out we are having a much harder time selling NPR on climate change than we had hoped. Their science guy can't get on air, and their bigger names are really only interested in talking to you about everything but. So instead of NPR, going to keep trying to find someone actually interested in the issue.